Sal Romero announces bid for Harrisonburg City Council

HARRISONBURG, VA: Sal Romero, a Harrisonburg City Public Schools teacher, announces his bid for Harrisonburg City Council today at the Summit for Youth and Families in Crisis at the Lucy F. Simms Community Center. Sal is seeking the Democratic Party nomination for one of the two city council seats up for election in November.

The Youth and Families Summit provides a fitting setting for Sal's announcement. He is also the center director for Second Home, a highly regarded after-school program that serves students from Spotswood and Thomas Harrison Schools. Sal brings his first-hand knowledge and experience in supporting parents and families to the council race. "Making family, children, and education issues a significant part of our public policy discussions and decisions is critical. Listening to residents and being available in the community is the first step towards that," said Sal.

Sal, a 20-year area resident, graduated from Broadway High School and from James Madison University with a Bachelors of Science degree. He also earned his Masters in School Administration from Shenandoah University. Sal is the oldest of five siblings and lives with his wife and family in Harrisonburg.
